

From the natural field station of the mind, appears the vast expanse of dharmas, like billows of radiant clouds, unimpeded and without obstruction.
No wandering mind emerges.
Full of natural interest, and wonder,
joy and curiosity,
for the immeasurable mysteries--
realm upon realm, revealing.

The world and mind is so wondrous exactly as it is, so why gild it with gold, add or subtract to it, even a very tiny bit? The path of liberation, Buddhadharmā is not to add anything at all, hold no models, engage in no fabrications, no make believe, allow the story making to fade and cease, and strip away all partial views—to reveal life and mind just as it naturally is. That is extraordinary! What wealth! This results in a loving, compassionate, vividly aware and vast human being--for everyone.

(M. Webber, May 7, 2006)